GRADING GRAIN IN OGDEN

For two weeks past, all wheat passing through Ogdén has been sampled, first, by a representative of the Utah-Idaho Grain Exchange, and then by government men from the Federal Grain Supervision office in Salt Lake.

Yesterday C. H. DeWitt, with a degree from the Agricultural college of Oregon, was in Ogdén, acting for the federal grain supervisor. He was checking up on the Utah-Idaho Grain Exchange samples.

This check and re-check on the wheat going through Ogdén is to be a permanent thing, and the object is to protect the farmer, the buyer and the public generally.

In the past private parties have been grading the wheat of the country and small buyers have been making their own terms with farmers, who, in their lack of understanding of the exact quality of their grain, have suffered. Today the United States government is doing the grading and now no wheat can be sold at destination without first receiving careful inspection and classification by government agents, in fact the wheat is sold on the federal grading.

The purpose is to protect the public from eastern speculators who beat down the farmers on the one hand and then boost the price to the consumer.

By the way, the headquarters for the federal grain supervisor in this district, which embraces Idaho and a part of western Wyoming, should have been established in Ogdén, as only a very small percentage of the wheat shipments in the intermountain region ever touches Salt Lake.

LANSLOWNE'S PEACE LETTER

When Marquis Lansdowne issued his letter on last Thursday, advocating peace, The Standard was in doubt as to whether the suggestion was inspired by a desire for peace among a large circle of influential Englishmen who felt the war had reached a serious phase with disaster looming large for the allies, but the public utterances of the leading statesmen of Great Britain and the vigorous denunciations of the press in response to Lansdowne, have convinced us there is no weakening on the part of the British.

If the English find their cause hopeless, the overtures looking to a cessation of hostilities will come from an indirect source, in much the manner of Marquis Lansdowne's appeal, but in this case we are now quite certain the marquis was almost alone in his desire for the ending of a conflict which is paralyzing civilization.

In the reichstag, on Friday, Count George F. von Hertling, the new imperial German chancellor, declared the central powers stood on the foundations of the papal peace note. He held the allies responsible for the continuation of the terrible slaughter and the destruction of the irreparable works of civilization and for the mad self-mangling of Europe. In this utterance is to be found the constantly recurring self-righteousness of the German conspirators which brands them as the most dangerous tyrants the world could be placed under. They scheme and plot and plan over a long period of years, then start their hurricane of fire to sweep over civilization, and, when the conflagration is at its height, hold the fire-fighters responsible if they do not cease to battle against the flames.

But why should Great Britain, France, Italy or the United States want a peace which would make Germany a victorious nation and a constant menace to the future of the world?

Germany, it is true, has been hard hit by this war, but so have other countries. Taking advantage of a peace which would proclaim Germany the military master of the destinies of nations, it would not be two years before the Kaiser would begin to swagger and apply commercial pressure in order to advance German trade and break down the influence of his enemies. Russia would be courted, France in some degree placated, but Great Britain and America would be openly antagonized. South American countries would be bulldozed into extending preferred privileges to German trade.

There would be endless distrust and the United States would be compelled to arm and keep on arming for the day when German treachery, first having offered the hand of friendship, would strike to kill.

Do the people of the United States want that kind of peace?

THE WEEK-END WAR NEWS

On Friday the Germans made a thrust at the British trenches south of Cambrai and they drove through to a depth of two miles before they were checked. At the same time they countered on the forces of General Byng near Cambrai and gained ground.

This strength of the Germans is proof that very large bodies of Teutons have been withdrawn from Poland and are on the west front.

It would be well for the allies to sit tight until they get a better measure of the present man-power of the Teutons.

Before the collapse of the Russians, the allies had a complete mastery on the west front, but today they are confronted with new problems.

In the breaking of the Italian lines, the Austro-Germans captured over 2000 guns, much ammunition and other equipment. The guns are now firing shells at the allies. From the Russian front at least 2000 guns have been made available for use in France and Flanders. With this reinforced artillery, the Germans are capable of making an effective reply to Haig at Ypres or Byng near Cambrai.

And the worst feature is that, with an armistice, the central powers can draw off many more army corps from the Russian front. The armistice will provide that the status quo be maintained, but the Germans never allow themselves to be hampered by mere scraps of papers. Hindenburg will keep a patrol in the trenches from Riga to Galicia to see to it that the Russians strictly observe the agreement, but the Germans will do that which is to their advantage, regardless of the understanding, and, as a result, there will be a steady stream of troops from Warsaw to northern Italy and northern France.

We see no bright prospects for the allies, except the constantly growing army of the United States and the possibility that extreme disgust in Russia will bring about a revolution which will drive the Bolshevik plotters out of public life and restore the country to its proper alignment with the allies.

SERVICES ON SUNDAY FOR FIRST OGDEN BOY KILLED

On the day that George K. Liddell, Ogdén's first hero to give his life for the great cause of democracy was officially reported among the missing, his mother, Mrs. Alexander Liddell, of 318 Franklin avenue, received a letter from him, stating that all was well with him. The letter, with the personal parts left out, is here printed.

Memorial services will be held for him Sunday evening in the First ward chapel, corner of Thirty-third street and Grant avenue, beginning at 7 o'clock. Among the speakers will be Mayor Abbot R. Heywood and others. Appropriate music will be furnished.

His Last Letter.

The letter from the young man follows:

"On Active Service, Oct. 30, 1917.

"My Dear Mother: I hardly know how to begin, there is so much to tell after the long delay. (After mentioning some personal affairs.)

"I made friends for myself everywhere I went. Arriving in Winnipeg in August, 1916, I joined a 'Little Black Devils' battalion, which was being recruited to strengthen for reinforcements for the Eighth Canadian battalion 'Little Black Devils,' which is my battalion now. I am in D company, Fourteenth platoon and in the Lewis machine gun section. When you write to me, mark the address that way. The 'Little Black Devils' is an old Winnipeg unit that has made a good reputation for itself in this war. 'I left Canada in April, 1917, sailed from Halifax and landed in (word deleted by censor). All troops after arrival get a shore leave or last leave, with railroad fare paid to any part of the island. I went to London with two other boys from Illinois, for there are lots of Yankees in the Canadian army, and came over to France September 1. I have not been into action yet but may be into it before you get this letter. There is nothing to worry about. If I am hurt the government will war you. Every provision is made to help the wounded over here.

"You say Smalley (he refers to Arthur Smalley of Ogdén) is with the Canadians. If you can get his address let me have it. I would try to find him for I would like to see some one from Ogdén.

"Well, I guess the U. S. is very busy now training the men who are called up, but I think every man that can be sent over here won't be more than is needed, for there are some awful fights going on all the time. I can hear the guns every day and night, and 'Old Fritz,' that is the name for the Boche, comes over every night and day in his airplanes, and you can guess what happens for he has done the same thing over London since the war started.

"If any of my old friends ask for me, I am in the finest of health, but a little cold footed for the weather is getting cold over here now, and winter will soon be here. While I was in London, some other Yankees and I wrote to the vice consul in London and asked to be transferred to the U. S. troops, but he answered that it could not be done unless our work would be of very special service to the U. S. army. I have heard of others trying, but they met with almost the same thing.

"Give my love to all. I will write more often from now on, if it is only a 'whit bang'—that's an army post card. I already sent one. 'Whizbang' is also Fritz's light field shell. Send me lots of mail; let me know how everybody is doing. I will try to have half my pay assigned to you. If I can get it done you will receive it every month or every two months. I don't know which, but will let you know if I can do it.

"Your loving son, 'GEORGE'." "P. S.—Tell the rest of the family to send me a line once in a while. Love to all."
